BY ROSE TERRY

"Love is better than house or lands;
So, Sir Stephen, I'll ride with thee!
Quick she steps where the courses stands
Light she springs to the saddle-tree.

"Love is better than kith or kin;
So, close she clung and so close clasped he,
They heard no sob or the bitter wind,
Nor the snow that shuddered along the lea.

"Love is better than life or breath!
The drifts are over the horse's knee;
Still, they sink to the soft, cold death,
And the snow-shroud folds them silently.

"Houses and lands are gone for aye
Kith and kin take the wild wind free
Life and breath have flitted away;
But love hath blossomed eternally.

"An Ugly Dog."

[From Cornhill Magazine.]

"Splish—splash," went that wretched dog through the mud, his ears hanging down and his tail between his legs.

"Oh! the ugly dog!" cried two young girls who were carrying home clothes from the wash.

"Oh! the ugly brute!" shouted a carter; and he gave his whip a loud crack to frighten him. But the dog took no heed of them. He ran patiently on, only stopping at the crossings when there were too many carriages for him to pass, but not seeming to busy himself at all as to what people said, or what they thought about him.

He ran on for a long time.

No doubt of it, he was an ugly dog. He was lean and scraggy. His coat was of a dirty gray color, and in many places the hair was worn off in patches. Neither were there any tokens that he had ever been a handsome dog, and that this present state of wretchedness was owing merely to sudden misfortune. He looked, on the contrary, as though he had always been an ill-fed dog, having de-ultory habits, no home to go to, and seldom anything better to eat than a chance bone or a crust picked up in the gutter. Yes, he was certainly a miserable dog.

But I wondered to see him run so obstinately in the middle of the road, when there was room in plenty for him on the pavement. He was a small dog, and by trotting close under the shop fronts he could have slipped unnoticed through the crowd and not have exposed himself to be run over by the cabs and whipped by the carters. But no; he preferred the road where the mud was, and he ran straight before him, without looking right or left, just exactly as if he knew his way.

I might have paid no more attention to this dog, for there are enough of whom I take no notice, but I observed that he had a collar round his neck, and that to his collar was attached a basket. This set me thinking; for a dog who carries a basket is either a dog sent on an errand, or a runaway dog who has left his master, and does not now know where to go. Now, which could this one be? If he was a dog that ran on errands, why did not his owner find him better, so that his tribe should look less spare? But if he was a dog who had left his master, and ran away into the world to face cold and trouble alone, what hardships or what cruelties had he had to suffer, that he should have taken such a step at desperate? I felt I should like to have these questions answered, for there was something of mystery in them; I therefore followed the dog.

We were in Oxford street, in that part of it which is between the Marble Arch and Duke street, and the dog was running in the direction of the Regent Circus. It was a dull, wet day in winter, the rain had been falling. A gray fog was spreading over the vapor along the road, and every one looked cold and uncomfortable. A few shops were lighted up here and there, for evening was drawing in. But the contrast between the glare of the gas and the occasional glow of the red hot coal fires burning cheerily in the grates of ground-floor parlors only served to make the streets more dark and dreary. And yet, the dog went pattering on, going at a sort of quick jog-trot pace, keeping his ears always down, and paying no attention either to the omnibuses that rolled by him, the costermongers who swore at him, or the other dogs who stopped at times with a puzzled air, and gazed at him with silent wonder. I had to step out fast to keep up with him. It is astonishing how that spatil dog could trot! I was afraid more than once that he would distance me, but, thanks to the knack he had of always keeping to the middle of the road, I was prevented from losing sight of him. We passed North Audley street, after that Duke street, and we then came opposite a small street which forms a very narrow and dirty thoroughfare at the end which is nearest Oxford street. Here the dog paused for a moment and appeared to hesitate as to what he should do. He made a few steps forward, then receded; but, finally, seemed to make up his mind and entered the street, still trotting. There was one cab there. The cabman, drawn by rain, which had begun to fall again, the cold, and the fog had all scared away the habitual frequenters of the one or two sordid cook-shops that line both sides of the way. There was only a rag, and bone man, selling broken bottles at his door and coughing wheezily from old age and misery. The dog went on. The street grows wider as one proceeds, and the houses also become better and cleaner. I asked myself whether the dog could possibly have his home about here, and whether he would not suddenly disappear down an area, in which case the romance of the thing would have been cooled, and I should have had my walk for nothing. But no, he turned abruptly off at a mews, and after a few seconds of the same apparent hesitation as before, shuffled his pace and stopped opposite a public house.

A mews is never quite empty. There are always grooms loafing about the doorways; or stable-boys going in and out of washhouses. At the moment when the dog and I appeared, a coachman was harnessing two horses to a brougham, and a couple of men were helping him. Opposite, and exchanging remarks with them from the threshold of the public house, stood a servant in breeches smoking a long clay pipe; the dog was standing still; but all at once, before I had time to suspect what was going to happen, he rose on his hind legs and commenced walking round them on them.

The man with the breeches and the clay pipe uttered a cry of surprise. The two others and the coachman raised their heads, and, upon seeing this strange sight, left their work and clustered up to look. A few more people, attracted by the noise, came and joined us. We soon formed a ring.

It seemed to please the dog to see us all around him, for he gravely wagged his tail once to and fro, and tried to put more spirit into his exercise. He walked five times round on his hind legs, looking fixedly before him like a soldier on duty, and doing his best, poor dog!—I could see that—to make us laugh. For my part, seeing the others remain speechless in their astonishment, I laughed aloud to encourage him; but shall I say the truth? I felt more ready to cry. There was something inexpressibly sad in the serious expression of this lonely dog, performing by himself a few tricks that some absent master had taught him, and doing so of his own accord, with some secret end in view, that he himself only could know of. After taking a moment's rest he set to work again, but this time on his fore feet, pretending to stand on his head. And what a poor, intelligent head it was, as almost shaving the ground, it looked appealingly at us all, and seemed to say, "Please do not play any pranks with me, for really I am not doing this for fun." When he had walked round on his head till he was weary, he lay down in the midst of the pillow, and made believe to be dead. He went through all the convulsions of a dying dog, breathing heavily, panting, suffering his lower jaw to fall, and then turning over motionless. And he did this so well that a stout, honest-faced woman, who had been looking on without laughing, exclaimed "Poor beast!" and drew her hands across her eyes.

The rain continued to fall, but not one of us thought of moving, only the dog, when he had lain dead a minute, got up and shook himself, to show us all that the performance was ended. He then displayed the extent of what he knew, and now he came to card to receive his fee. He stood up on his hind legs again, and walking to each of us separately, assumed the posture that is popularly known as "begging." I was the first to whom he came. He gazed at me interrogatively with his soft eyes wide opened, and followed my hand patiently to my waistcoat pocket. The basket around his neck was a round one with a lid to it tied down with a string, and a little slit in the lid through which to put in money. I dropped in a shilling and stooped down to read a bit of crumpled paper I saw hanging loosely from the collar. It bore these words, written in a shaky hand: "This is the dog of a poor man who is bedstricken; he earns the bread of his master. Good people do not keep him from returning to his home." The dog thanked me for my offering by wagging his tail, and then passed on to my neighbor. Human nature must be kinder than people think, for there was not one of the spectators—not even he with the breeches and clay pipe, whose face had impressed me unfavorably—but gave the dog something. As for him, when he had gone his round, he barked two or three times to say good bye, and then patrored contentedly away at the same jog-trot pace he had come.

He went up the street, and I followed him, but when we had reached Oxford street he quickened suddenly, and began to run hard, as if his day was ended and he wanted to get home. Evening had quite fallen by this time, and I felt it would be useless to go after my four-legged mystery on foot, so I called a cab and said: "Follow that dog," very much to the driver's amusement.

It is a long way from the part of Oxford street in which we were to Tottenham Court Road, where the small dog led me. But I should have understood the journey had it not been made at such a furious pace. The dog never once looked round. Twenty times I thought he would be crushed by passing vans of carriages; but somehow he got through it. He had an extraordinary tact for finding a passage between horses' hoofs, and like a true London dog as he was, he showed intimate familiarity with all the intricacies of crossings. Still, it was some relief to me, both on his own account and on mine, when I saw him branch off at last. I was beginning to fear that he would never stop, that he had something of the Wandering Jew in him. It seemed impossible that without taking any rest, without even pausing for an instant to draw breath, such a very lean dog should keep on going so long. Tottenham Court Road (this was about eighteen months ago) used to be a sort of fair at night time. It is a lengthy highway, running amidst a tangled network of busy streets, the population of which, from dusk until the hour when the public houses close, used to spread hungry and idle among the countless booths which had then not yet been swept away, and where shell-fish, sour fruit and indigestible-looking meat were sold by yelling costermongers. On the night in question, when I went there in pursuit of the dog, I foresaw that I should be led to one of those sickly nests of fever, where poverty, disease and misery have their abodes set up in permanence; and I was not wrong.

The dog, running faster than ever now, as if he felt more afraid for his basket amongst the ravenous crowd than he had done at the West End, bolted suddenly up a narrow side street, where there was no room for a cab to pass. I paid the driver and jumped out. It was a filthy street. But that was a secondary matter. Where the dog went I would go; and thus I dodged after him, first down a crooked alley, then through a foul court, and lastly up a passage, where it was pitch dark. Here I grouped my way along a damp wall, and stumbled upon the first step of a staircase. Being a smoker, however, I had some vesuvians about me, struck one, lit a piece of twisted paper with it, and by the moment's flame I thus obtained descried the dog making his way up a creaky flight of wooden steps, battered in places and rotting from mould. He barked when he saw the light, and growled uneasily. But I softened my voice and cried out, "good dog! good dog!" trying thereby to appease him. I suppose his instinct told him that I was not an enemy, for he turned round to sniff my trousers, and when I struck a second vesuvian he consented to my accompanying him without doing anything else but continue his sniffing. We went up three stories in this way, until we reached the garret floor. There were two doors face to face, and one of them had a latch with a piece of string tied to it. The string dangled with a loop at its end to within a few inches of the ground. The dog raised one of his fore paws, pressed it on the loop, and by this means opened the door. We both walked in together.

There was a rushlight burning in the neck of a gingerbeer bottle. There was an empty saucepan in the grate without the fire. Some tattered clothes were hanging on the back of a broken chair, and some bits of plaster fallen from a cracked ceiling were encumbering the floor. On the splintered deal table was a plate with a solitary bone on it, and next to it a cup with the handle gone. I turned from the sight of these things to a mattrass laid in a corner of the room. The dog was rendered stationary by the gusts of wind that swept through the window—to which bits of paper had been pasted for want of glass—that I could not at first distinguish very clearly where I was, and what I saw. I could hear the affectionate whining of the dog, and vaguely see him leaping upon some one against whom he was rubbing his head, and whose face he was licking with an exhuberance of love. I heard a voice too—but a voice so husky and broken that it resembled a whisper—repeat feebly: "Good dog—good Jim!" and then I saw a hand untie the basket, and heard the sound of money poured on the couch.

"Good Jim!—good Jim!"—went on the cracked voice; and it began counting, "One, two, Oh, good Jim!—good Jim! here's a shilling. One-and-threepence, one-and-ninepence, two shillings. Oh, good dog! there and a penny, three and"—But here followed a terrified shriek.

"Who's that?" cried the man, covering up the money with his sheet; and he looked at me, livid and haggard with the ague of fever.

"Don't be frightened," I said; "I am come to do you no harm. I am a friend. I have followed your dog home, and desire to help you if you are in need."

He seemed to be a man about fifty, for his hair was not all gray; but the ghastly hollowness of his cheeks, the emaciated condition of his body, and, above all the gleam of disease in his burning eyes, made him older than a man of ninety, for they told more plainly than words could have told that he had already one foot within his grave.

My tone and my appearance seemed to reassure him; but he continued to hide his money.

"I am a poor man, sir," he gasped,—"a very poor man. I have nothing but what my dog earns me, and that's nothing. He goes out to idle; and if he picks up a few pence" (here the man had a fit of hectic coughing)—"if he do pick up a few pence, sir, it's all he do pick up."

I felt my heart ache for I guessed the truth.

"He's not an idle dog," I said. "Has he not earned you more than three shillings to-day?"

"Oh, no, sir—no, sir; it's threepence," protested the miser troubling. "It's threepence—threepence, sir. Look and see."

"You are very ill, my man," I said, approaching his mattrass. "You must let me send you a doctor."

"Oh, sir! no, no; I—I've no money to give them. Let me alone, please. I'm not ill; I shall be well to-morrow. It's nothing but a cold—a a cold.

His dog was continuing to lick his face. I remembered that the poor brute had not eaten.

"Your dog must be hungry," I observed; "shall I give him this bone? He has earned it well."

"Oh, God! Oh, God! Let that bone alone," muttered the unhappy wretch, trying to rise; "it's my supper for to-night. Jim doesn't want anything; he picks up plenty in the streets. Oh! oh! I shall starve if you give him that bone."

"I will buy you something to eat," I answered, taking up the bone to which there was no particle of flesh left. "Here, Jim," said I, holding it out. But the dog, instead of accepting the offer, hung fluttering by the gusts of wind that swept through the window—to which bits of paper had been pasted for want of glass—that I could not at first distinguish very clearly where I was, and what I saw. "No! no! Jim," panted the miser fearfully, and the dog turned away his head, refusing to be noticed.

"How long have you been laid up like this?" was my next question. I was growing sick at heart.

"Ten weeks, sir—oh, ten weeks," groaned the man—who had caught the bone out of his hand and thrust it under his pillow—"ten weeks; and when I fell ill, the dog went out one morning and brought me back a penny in his mouth. Since then, I bought him a basket, and he goes out every day—but he's—he's idle, sir—he's idle; he brings me nothing to what he used to do when we went out together. Yes—oh, yes! he's an idle dog!"

But why prolong such a dialogue? Is there anything more depressing than the sight of moral infirmity coupled with bodily disease? This palsied miser was a rich man at least rich comparatively to his station. He had made himself a small fortune by the intelligence of his dog, and his sudden illness, instead of reducing him to poverty had, on the contrary, only added to his means. The dog earned more alone than he had earned while his master. Each morning at the break of day he went out with his empty basket, and every night at sunset he returned with it half full. I learned this from the miser's neighbors; honest people though poor, who pretended to believe in the fevered wretch's want, in order that he might not have cause to dread them, and so refuse their necessary service.

There is a great deal of this innate, unsuspected delicacy in the hearts of the working poor. These rough and uncouth, but kindly natures, tended the graceless miser in his sickness. They bought his food for him, they washed his linen, and they asked for no payment for anything they did. As for the unhappy man's gold, it was at their mercy; but the thought of touching it never seemed to cross their minds.

"Only," said one with a native accent, "I think, sir, 'twill be better when the boy's laid in the ground. His money might be good then to some as would make use of it."

"And the dog?" I murmured reflectively.

"The dog's his friend, sir," was the neighbor's answer, "and he won't live long when his master's gone."

And these words were prophecy. I sent for a doctor, for a nurse, and for nourishing food, to battle against death; but our efforts were useless. The miser lived a week, and upon each of the seven days the dog went out according to his habit, with his basket round his neck, and remained out for ten or twelve hours, till dusk. Sometimes I followed him from morning till evening; seeing which, and remembering my face as that which stood daily by his master's bedside, he wagged his tail at my approach, and consented to walk at my heels. One night the miser died, and on the morrow Jim did not go out. He had missed his master the night before, and guessed that they had put him in the long black box that stood in the middle of the room. When the men came to carry away this long black box, the dog went after them, and cried. He followed the coffin to the cemetery, where he and I were the only spectators besides the curate, the sexton, and the undertaker's men. When the earth was thrown in, he looked at me plaintively to know what it meant, and when the burial was over, he wished to remain near the open tomb, waiting till his master should rise. I took him home with me, but he would not eat, and next morning at sunrise he howled for his basket. It was no use keeping him, so I tied the basket round his neck, and sent him out.

That evening, foreseeing what would happen, I went to the cemetery. The dog arrived at nightfall, with his basket full of pence, and I turned them all out upon the grave. "Come home, Jim," I said, with the tears rising to my eyes; but he whined mournfully and tried to scratch up the earth. Twice more he went out like this all day, and brought back money for his master; but on the third evening, finding that the pence on the grave remained untouched, he suffered me, without resistance, to take off his collar, and lay down at his full length near the miser's last sleeping place.

The next morning he did not go on his rounds, for he was dead.

COLFAX VINDICATES HIMSELF.

His Testimony in Full.

[From the New York Times of Wednesday.]

EVENING SESSION.

The committee reassembled at 7 o'clock, and Vice President Colfax read the following letter from a gentleman, whom he declared to be the best parliamentarian in the United States:

CLERK'S OFFICE,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
Feb. 10, 1873.

Hon. Schuyler Colfax:

DEAR SIR: At your request I have examined the proceedings of the House of Representatives for the session of Congress commencing December, 1867, and ending July, 1868, as reported in the Congressional Globe. I have examined all your rulings, as Speaker on every proposition made during the entire session by Hon. E. B. Washburne, of Illinois, C. C. Washburn, in relation to the Union Pacific Railroad, and find no ruling made by you that was not, in my judgement, commended and justified by Parliamentary law.

Very respectfully,
JOHN M. BARCLAY,
Journal Clerk, House of Representatives.

Mr. Colfax then addressed the committee as follows:

GENTLEMEN: Last Fall I was one of a number of persons in public life charged with having been bribed by gifts of stock in the Credit Mobilier, from which enormous dividends had been received, and for which certain legislation had been procured. I replied to these charges in a speech at South Bend, Ind., Sept. 20, 1872, in which, after showing that the most important part of this legislation had been enacted long before the alleged bribery, I responded to the personal attack as follows, which I read from the Chicago Inter-Ocean of the next day: "Never having in my life a dollar of stocks of any kind, I did not say to Oakes Ames that I would purchase stock in the Credit Mobilier, or Credit Immobilier, if there is one; nor do I know of any law prohibiting it. Do I need to add that neither Oakes Ames nor any other person ever gave or offered to give me one share, or twenty shares, or 200 shares in the Credit Mobilier, or any other railroad stock and that unfortunately, I have never seen or received the value of a farthing out of the 320 per cent. dividends, or the 890 per cent. dividends in cash, stock or bonds you have read about for the past month, nor 100 per cent., nor the tenth of one per cent. I have said that if twenty shares of it could be procured at par, without buying into a prospective law-suit, it would be a good investment, if as valuable a stock as represented, but never having been plaintiff nor defendant in a court of justice, I want no stock at any price with a lawsuit on the top of it."

It will be seen from these extracts that I publicly claimed last Fall the right to purchase the stock, and avowed frankly that I would have been willing to pay for twenty shares if I did not buy into a prospective lawsuit, but that no possible profits could induce me to involve myself in litigation, have my own town years before this speech voluntarily abandoned a contract to purchase at the rate I had stated, and on the very grounds I had stated, and having no certification of ownership to stock in it, my answer to the charges then made it the exact truth. And then I frankly accepted also whatever odium might attach to the willingness to purchase and to hold the stock, as I then understood it. I will add that when I said last September that neither Oakes Ames nor any other person ever gave or offered to give me any of this stock, has been repeatedly printed during this session with the essential word "give" omitted, entirely changing its sense. Mr. Ames having sworn December 17th, in his original statement before the committee, which he declared (see page 21 of the evidence) embodied the exact facts, that he could not remember having paid me any dividends, now declares that in June, 1868, a check payable to the initials S. C., or bearer, for $1,200 but not indorsed by me nor any one else, was paid by him to me as a cash dividend of the Credit Mobilier. In answer to this charge; I repeat again, that I have not the slightest knowledge or recollection or belief, that I ever saw this check or any other check of Mr. Ames till we presented it before this committee, nor that I have ever been paid or proffered by him, directly or indirectly, in check, stock, or bonds $1,200, or $100, or $1, on any account whatever. I further state that I have not the slightest knowledge, recollection, or belief that I ever heard there was or could be any cash dividends on the Credit Mobilier till the discussion of last Fall, and I am as positive as I can be of any fact in the past that Mr. Ames never spoke to me of this last dividend, and never paid or proffered to me in person or through any other channel, any check or money, or bond, on that or any other account. It seems to me impossible and incredible that I should have received the check without remembering that addition to my income, and especially a check drawn so singularly by initials and not endorsed by my name as all my rulings I have talked to him when he failed, as I did, about letting the $500 go, which I had paid him on the dividend stock, if he had paid me an overplus of $700. I must add that until today I have never heard of the certificate for $1,500 of Union Pacific bonds, $60 interest on which Mr. Ames says he paid me in January, 1869; and I would not have been more astounded to have been charged by him with the assassination of one of his family than I have been by his charges that he paid me either $1,200 or $60, or any other amount whatever on the stock that I had abandoned. I will add that for over four years I have spoken in my family of this transaction exactly as I described it in my testimony of January 7, namely, that I had contracted to purchase, had paid about $500, had heard of threatened and acrimonious litigation among its principal stockholders, and that, therefore abandoned it without receiving any dividend or certificate, but at a loss of the money I had paid upon it, and of the fact of these conversations I will produce evidence.

I come now to the bank deposit of $1,200 in bills for June 22, 1868, and the committee will remember that I really invited the examination of my bank accounts, by stating to them, unasked, that I kept my accounts at the First National Bank, where all my checks deposited would be found indorsed by me whether payable to order or bearer. Diffident as it is to recall all the transactions of five years in a public man's life, I will state to the committee where all the money came from deposited from June 22, 1868, and will add that it was the month immediately succeeding my nomination for the office I now hold, and the total deposit was $1,968.63, and there being no previous deposit later than the 1st of June, it shows that this amount was the accumulation of moneys paid to me during the intervening three weeks. This is also proven by the dates of the checks deposited. One check was for $18.62, dated June 12, signed by J. N. Seymour, since deceased; one for $250, dated June 12, signed by E. C. Cardin; and one for $500, dated June 17, signed by T. Denny & Co.—none of them having the slightest connection with the subject of investigation before this committee. Of the deposit of bills for $200, I am positive the sum was paid me by my stepfather, Mr. Matthews, on account of a debt he owed me. In December, 1867, I paid $155 for a piano bought of Steinway & Co., through W. G. Metzerott, for his daughter, the check for which is in the bank, and I agreed to wait for the most of it until the summer, when he expected to be better able to pay me. After my nomination in May, 1868, I had numberless appeals for contributions for political expenses in various localities, for processions, bands, charity, religious aid, &c., and I had promised to contribute as promptly and largely as possible to the legitimate expenses of the canvass in my sturdily contested State of Indiana. I therefore asked Mr. Matthews to pay me his indebtedness as soon as he could raise it, to assist me in meeting those demands incident to my new position. During the month of June, 1868, and, as nearly as I can fix the time, about the middle of the month, he paid me $200 in bills on account, and early the next month he paid me another installment, completing the payment before Congress adjourned, late in July. I am very confident that this $200 formed part of this $1,200 deposit, being part of my cash receipts between the deposits of June 1 and 22. About the time of this payment, and as near as I can fix the date, about the middle of the month of June, and very soon after the payment of Mr. Matthews, I was opening my letter-mail at the breakfast table, in accordance with my usual custom, and found an envelope within another envelope postmarked New York. On opening the inner envelope, I found it contained a letter written by George F. Nesbitt, congratulating me most cordially and warmly on my nomination for the Vice Presidency, and saying that the writer desired to send me, confidentially, the remittance enclosed to aid me in the heavy expenses in the canvass, but wished it kept a secret, as neither his family nor any one would ever know it unless I told them. Inclosed in this was a greenback or a national bank note for $1,000. It was as gratifying as it was liberal, and holding up the letter and the bill, I asked the attention of all my family to it, and then read them the letter. The fact of sending so large a bill by mail was commented upon, and the magnitude of the gift was discussed, when Mr. Matthews remarked that it came in good time, either he or I then referring especially to the appeal of Mr. Conner, Chairman of the Indiana Republican Committee, for money to aid in arranging for the canvass already in active progress there. The bill was then passed round from hand to hand and examined. I am sure I deposited it with the $200 I had received from Mr. Matthews, and, purchasing on the same day, as the bank-books show, a draft for the exact amount of this remittance, and in exact accordance with the donor's wish, and exactly as discussed at my table at the time, sent it at once to the Chairman of the Republican Committee at Indianapolis. Fortunately, this does not rest on my own testimony alone. Living witnesses will tell the committee that they remember the receipt of this bill and the contents of the letter in which it was enclosed, and that it was at once discussed how it could be used to carry out Mr. Nesbitt's desire, and the draft presented and cashed by the cashier of the bank proves that the very day I deposited $1,200in bills. I bought and remitted out of my deposit draft for $1,000 to the Chairman of the Indiana State Committee. That this inclosed Mr. Conner, who found in the bank here, and laid before your committee the next day after the bank deposit was testified to, my counsel at the time promising to connect it with my evidence. My family at the time consisted of mother—since deceased—my step-father, Mr. Mathews, my half-sister, Mrs. Hollister, whose residence is in a distant Territory, beyond the Rocky Mountains. I said it was fortunate there were living witnesses to this besides myself, for, on a thorough examination of the accounts and papers of Mr. Nesbitt, made by his executor at my request, Mr. Nesbitt having died the next week, no such sum is there found. He had carried out exactly what he wrote, that it was intended to be confidential, unknown even to his family, and if it was revealed it would have to be by me; and he evidently sent it to a bill that I might easily to accomplish the object.

During the last eight or ten years the accumulations of my letters has been so extraordinary that it has been my regular habit to destroy fully nine-tenths of them. Those that are not destroyed are not filed, but kept in their envelopes until they crowd my drawers and tables, and are then tied up, but not chronologically, to be stowed away in never room for them can be found. Indeed, Mr. Chauncey, of the House employes, after I had left that wing of the Capitol for the Senate wing in 1869, happened to find a box full of old letters thus tied up, the loss of which I had entirely overlooked. I have gone three times over all the letters I have preserved, and have not found this letter or any political letters for June, 1868. The acknowledgment of this draft for $1,000 sent to Indiana cannot be found, though fortunately the bank was able to find the draft itself. The letters accompanying the three checks deposited on the 22d of June have also been destroyed, so that I am unable to produce either of the five letters relating to the transactions of the day. I remember distinctly that after my nomination my mail increased enormously, mounting to fifty, if not some times one hundred letters per day, and their preservation seemed so impossible that I remember, as others do, more than once almost filling a waste-basket with the fragments of destroyed letters; but, as I have said, besides the draft, which testifies for itself, there are living witnesses here to prove that I received at this time this thousand dollar bill, one of them having made a three thousand mile journey purposely to tell this committee her recollection of it. When my bank account was examined here the cashier was asked what the $45,000 footings meant, and he replied to the inquiry that it was the amount of the debits and credits. When the accounts were finally balanced it was telegraphed to the New York Tribune that night that the books showed that I deposited $45,000 in one year, and the inference of course was that I could therefore easily have forgotten the $1,200 in question. As my general accounts have thus been made a subject of discussion, and as I have no secrets in regard to them, I felt it my right now to correct this misstatement. This total was for three years—not one year—namely, from December, 1865, to October, 1868, inclusive, and embraced, besides other cash accounts, the change made in my investments, the avails of a laborious life, and which changes were mainly on the advice of valuable friends in New York, Baltimore, and the West. In the debtor side are purchases of $5,000 seven-thirties of the bank between December, 1865, and April, 1866, mainly from the receipts for lecturing; one share of the New York Tribune stock at $8,000 in January, 1867; a present of $1,000 in the early part of the same year to my mother, then the head of my family; an investment of $5,000 in an Iron Company of Lake Superior; an investment of $3,000 in the bonds of the Pennsylvania Steel Company; a house and lot in South Bend, near the Post-office, which I am glad to state is worth now nearly double the $2,000 I paid for it; a loan of $445 to Mr. Mathews (as stated); an investment of $3,000 in a Western rolling mill, and payment of $1,750 to Mr. Ricketson Burroughs for money borrowed of him. This amounts to $30,000, out of the $45,000 transaction of these three years. The balance in the credit side, that enabled me to pay these amounts, were as follows: During those years I was lecturing on my stage-coach ride of 1865 across the continent, during November, the holiday recess, on Saturdays in the early part of the session, and during the spring when Congress adjourned, in March, receiving from $100 to $200 per lecture. I received in all over $12,000 from this source, of which I estimate about $10,000 was deposited here. I sold the five thousand in seven-thirties, and also sold the Tribune share at $6,100, and Mr. Matthews returned me the $455 he owed me. Besides these items I sold sixty-two shares of Adams Express stock at 72½ and a lot of second mortgage bonds, of the Alton & Terre Haute Railroad for $1,920, making about $41,000 in all, which offsets the $30,000 in investments charged against them. Of course the committee understands that in bank accounts, where changes of investments are made, the same money alters figures three or four times over. Thus, I deposited a lecturing money, bought seven-thirties, sold them at an advance, and used the proceeds for another investment. I bought a Tribune share, mainly out of similar receipts; sold it at an advance, and again invested the proceeds. A large part of the money I drew from the Sergeant-at-Arms for my salary was deposited in the bank, as I paid my housekeeping expenses there. It has taken all my dividends besides my salary to pay my expenses for the past half dozen years, and hence my willingness to follow the counsel of better financiers than myself in investments, and make changes of investments. In answer to questions of Judge Poland, Mr. Colfax testified that he thought he received the $1,000 the day after he received the money from Mr. Mathews; when witness told Mr. Ames that he (Colfax) must be out of it, Mr. Ames put his hand in his pocket, took out a small coin and, offering it to witness, said, consider I have bought it back; witness always had a great repugnance to lawsuits, and drew out of the Credit Mobilier for that reason. Would have been glad to get out of the Credit Mobilier at a cost of twice the sum he paid Ames. Received the $1,000 from Mr. Nesbitt about the middle of the month succeeding the nomination. If he had received the $1,000 from New York, and the $1,200 from Mr. Ames also, he would have deposited both of them.

G. W. Matthews sworn—Witness testified he was the stepfather of Mr. Colfax and resided with him in 1867 and 1868, and borrowed the money from him in 1868, as related by Mr. Colfax. Paid him $200 about the 16th of June, and another $100 about the 1st of July following. The balance was paid at the adjournment of Congress. Witness corroborated the testimony of Vice-President Colfax in relation to the receipt of $1,200 from Mr. Nesbitt. At the breakfast-table Mr. Colfax handed the letter with the $1,000 and said, "A thousand dollars from a gentleman almost a stranger to me." His mother said, "Read the letter, Schuyler." It was a short letter, and congratulatory in its tone. The writer begged Mr. Colfax to accept the inclosed, without naming the amount. Witness thought the letter was received about three days after he paid Mr. Colfax the $200, and when Mr. Ames failed the matter was the subject of conversation. Mrs. Matthews and Mrs. Ames being great friends, much sympathy was expressed for Mr. Ames by Mrs. Matthews, and Mr. Colfax said, never mind, mother, Mr. Ames owes me a little, and I will never ask him for it until he is able to pay me. He mentioned the amount as $500, but did not say what it was for.

Mrs. Caroline Hollister, sworn: Witness resides in Utah, and is half-sister of Mr. Colfax. Remember that Mr. Colfax received a $1,000 bill while at the breakfast table in June, 1868. It was inclosed in a letter congratulating him on his nomination. The letter came from Mr. Nesbitt.

Judge Hale said Mr. Nesbitt was a wealthy stationer and paper-manufacturer of New York, and he could offer evidence to that fact. He would also state that Mrs. Colfax was present, and could testify as to the $1,000, she having been informed about it on the Colorado trip in the Summer of 1868.

Judge Poland said the committee did not desire to hear further testimony on that subject.

Mr. Ames recalled—Had no knowledge of any money being paid to aid in the election of Senator Carpenter. General Butler recommended that Mr. Carpenter be employed as counsel in the case, and I understood that Mr. Carpenter was a candidate for the Senate; witness would not agree to employ Mr. Carpenter as they did not want to employ any counsel, and Mr. Carpenter was not employed; had no knowledge of Mrs. Ames or any other director taking such action; witness never made any statements about Mr. Carpenter being employed as counsel for the road in presence of Mr. Bullington or any other member of the House; had no knowledge of any application being made to the Central Pacific Road to retain Mr. Carpenter.

Hon. James Buffington sworn: Question—Did you have any conversation with Mr. Ames, or hear any conversation in relation to Mr. Carpenter being employed as counsel?

Answer—No, sir, never.

Question—Did you have any conversation with General Butler in reference to that matter?

Answer—Some time ago I heard General Butler state that the proposition had been made for the Union Pacific Road to retain Mr. Carpenter as counsel for the Union Pacific Railroad.

Question—Tell us all that was said.

Answer—General Butler said that Mr. Carpenter's friend had sent down here to have Mr. Carpenter retained as counsel, for the sum of $10,000. He said that Mr. Alley objected to it. Witness did not know if General Butler was employed.

Judge Poland announced that the examination of witnesses was now concluded. If any new evidence should be discovered, the committee, of course, would hear it.

The committee then, at 9½ p. m., adjourned till 10 o'clock to-morrow morning, when they will proceed to make up the report.

After the adjournment of the committee to-night, Vice-President Colfax received the following dispatch, from his married sister in Iowa:

KELLOGG, Iowa, February 11.

Mother wrote me in the summer of 1868 of your receiving a $1,000 bill. Mentioned it with other things, showing how much you were appreciated. Searching for letter. Will send it if found. MARY S. COWLES.

The above dispatch was filed with the committee on Thursday.

Largest Circulation in Northwestern Pennsylvania.

JUDGE BOARDMAN having refused Stokes a new trial, he will probably be executed in accordance with his sentence.

AN article on the testimony adduced in Vice-President Colfax's case has been unavoidably crowded out this morning.

THREE murders and three railroad accidents in one day, does not look as if the horrors for which this winter has already become noted, had abated much.

WEAK-KNEED sentimentalists are concocting a petition for the commutation of the sentence of the car-hook murderer, Foster, to imprisonment for life, but they have little hopes of moving Governor Dix from the discharge of his duty.

THE signal service is contemplating stationing members near the headwaters of all rivers in which ice gorges have proven so disastrous in times past, to report the rising of the rivers and breaking up of the ice, so that people in the lower valleys can be prepared for the danger.

AND now it seems that the people of Missouri begin to think that Colonel Bogy did send money freely, and buy votes to elect him to the Senate. He should have possessed worldly wisdom sufficient to have known that purgatory hath no furies like a hair defeated; but by disregarding this fact he is likely to find himself unseated.

ANOTHER heavy snowstorm has occurred in the far West and in Maine, which probably was continuous across the continent in the northern part of the country. Storms seem to be from the Northwest to the Southeast, we may catch a portion of it here in a day or two. Old Probs gave us warning yesterday morning, and is generally correct in his daily predictions. It will pay you to read them at this season of the year.

IF any argument was lacking to convince the gullible people that the President of the United States sought to be elected by a popular vote, they could easily be produced in connection with the official counting of the electoral vote Wednesday, a full report of which has been published. The two Houses of Congress were kept wrangling over technicalities and grave issues, for over eight hours, in order to officially announce what every school boy in the land knew before the official votes were counted.

A MOVEMENT is on foot in several cities of the East to establish training schools for nurses, where women can be thoroughly taught and drilled by practice to nurse and care for the sick. In Germany there have been several successful schools of this kind established, and throughout the Roman Catholic world the trained nurses of the Sisters of Charity have become famous. This is a mission for which women are pre-eminently fitted, and in which their success will ever be assured, when properly instructed and trained. It is a good work which will receive the most unqualified approval of all, whether they favor the peculiar doctrines of the strong-minded or not. Probably no branch of human knowledge is more systematically neglected by the girl of the period, than the study of her own complicated organism. Certainly no intellectual accomplishment of greater practical value to herself and her race could be undertaken by a woman than this same subject. Much of the unhappiness and misery of life, of both men and women, is due to this lack of knowledge on the part of mothers who study Harper's and Demorest's publications with an avidity bordering on mental prostration. If this subject can be popularized and become general, it will have a marked effect in moulding the future traits of American character. We have had a great deal of glitter and giddy excitement; let us let women show us more of the solid worth which we know that they possess to a remarkable degree.

Notes and Comments.

GOOD Mr. Durant was so kind as to come around and ask Parson Harlan if he required any of the needful to help him into the Senate. Of all the recorded deeds of philanthropy, this disinterested solicitude on the part of Dr. Durant is pre-eminent. As a friend of friendship, it has proven unfortunate, however, and has probably been the means of creating greater anxiety in the breast of the retired minister than he ever felt for the aching hearts of impenitent sinners in all his life.

THE worst feature in Parson Harlan's defense is that he attempts to excuse his acceptance of money from Dr. Durant, because he was not a member of Congress at the time the advance was made. Such petty chicanery is contemptible.

THE new Senator, Jones, of Nevada, has written a letter in which he admits that money was used in his election, but claims that it was not used corruptly. There was a time when no man would dare use money to influence his election, much less openly avow that he had done it. Corruption is a very uncertain word now-a-days, but it is certain that money can not be used so as to benefit an aspirant to a seat in the United States Senate, without being used corruptly. There is no such thing as honest election. The people of the United States generally are beginning to believe that seats in the United States Senate have been bought with money, and they do not approve of obtaining them in that way. From the tone of the people at the present time, we are inclined to think that Mr. Jones' Senatorial investment will not prove productive.

SINCE the days of Dogberry, it is doubtful if a decision more in accord with the spirit of that illustrious pettifogger was ever made public, than the one sided, shallow sentences which were put forward as a plea to plunder the orphans of Horace Greeley, of a single fact which had been proven to be interest of the children, was considered of any weight whatever, while the slightest testimony against their interest was jumped upon; after which the tender judge, who claimed to be guarding the interests of those who were incapable of managing their own affairs, in the name of the law, deliberately plundered the orphans of ten thousand dollars for one antagonistic interest, two thousand dollars to be paid to the opposing counsel and the fees of the executors, which will deprive the children of nearly all the available money of the estate. And this is called justice!

EVERY newspaper that has expressed an opinion is outspoken in condemnation of the senseless farce enacted in counting the votes of the Electoral College. It is time that the dangers of such a complicated system should be abolished. Practically the people elected the President. It should therefore be by direct vote, and not by a complication of events which are extremely liable to miscarry. Had the vote been a close, one, with the irregularity and uncertainty which was experienced Wednesday, there would have been a crisis in the affairs of the nation which would have unsettled business and created a wide-spread if not disastrous panic throughout the entire country. The votes of Louisiana and Arkansas were not counted, but as such action did not effect the result no great importance was attached to this failure to receive the vote. But if the result of the election had depended upon those votes it may easy to see that there would have been the most bitter contest over the matter.

SILK is now employed in the manufacture of silk goods; it takes the dyes easily, and preserves a gloss so well that it is difficult for one not an expert to detect its presence.

Topics of the Day.

We called attention weeks ago to the fact that the sewing machine interest is at the present time represented by a powerful lobby, which is endeavoring to obtain from Congress a renewal of their patents, which are on the eve of expiration. The Cincinnati Gazette, in an article on the subject, says:

A thing more potent for Congressional corruption than the Credit Mobilier, and whose success means a vastly greater robbery of the public, is now laying its plans to capture Congress. It is now a time when the stable can be locked before the horse is stolen. We mean the combination of sewing machine manufacturers, whose principal patents are about to expire, and which is now laying its plans to lobby their renewal through Congress. Vast fortunes have been realized in these patents, and they have been used to make the American people pay twice as much for machines as the same companies sell their machines for in England. But not satisfied with this, the enormous profit they have made is now combined to work through Congress their extension. The extension of these patents, if any one of the numerous patents of auxiliary parts, with which they are all combined, would be so unjustifiable an extension of a rich monopoly that it should be taken as evidence of the corruption of any member that votes for it, or becomes an accomplice for it, and of any officer of the Government who countenances it.

—The Boston Advertiser, speaking of the Best claims, says:

The Senate Committee on Claims, Senator Howe, of Wisconsin, chairman, has administered a lecture to the President on the use of the veto power. The Committee recommended and Congress passed a bill paying Dr. J. Milton Best, of Kentucky, twenty-five thousand dollars for property destroyed in the war. The President vetoed the bill on the ground that the loss of the claimant was the fortune of war, and that the payment of his claim would invite demands for the payment of a vast amount of money for property destroyed in all parts of the South under like unavoidable circumstances. The Committee come to the defence of their bill with a good deal of spirit, and remind the President that while he may sometimes correct mistakes, he may also make them; and that when he undertakes to review laws matured by Congress, with the aid of all its committees and all its members, it is necessary for him to mind its ways. Now the veto power is as plainly a prerogative of the President as the power to pass a bill over the veto is a prerogative of Congress; and the President would have the same right to lecture Congress for making it necessary for him to use his authority, as Congress or its committees have to lecture him for using it. As to the merits of the claim in question, the presumption is against them.

The proceedings of the two houses of Congress yesterday in the matter of counting the electoral votes cast in the several States in the recent election for President and Vice President will serve, we hope, to convince every man in Congress of the necessity of an immediate amendment of the constitution, simplifying the processes of the election of President and Vice President, and clearly providing for probable accidents between the election and the installation of said officers. We see, from the questions raised and the jurisdiction assumed by the two houses yesterday in the counting of the votes from Georgia, Mississippi, Louisiana and other States, that under our present system, in a close contest, the two houses, in counting the electoral votes, may reverse the election as actually determined by the electoral colleges, or involve the country in revolutionary excitements and possibly in civil war. These dangers, under the present indirect and complicated method of choosing our President and Vice President, can no longer be questioned. The country has outgrown this Republican apprenticeship system.

The railway lobby has thus abandoned its proud, lion-like bearing, and adopted the sott, insinuating tread of the panther. The railway interest no longer has legislation to propose, but contents itself by sending to Springfield "one quiet, lazy looking gentleman" to watch every bill, resolution, and motion affecting nearly or remotely its "vested rights," with instructions to copy and send to headquarters. These are healthful signs, portending victory to the people. When railway companies, controlling millions of dollars in ready money, dare not send their agents to the State capitals to disburse their hoards for the corruption of legislation the end of abuses and extortions is not far distant. When railway conductors are privately instructed to extort five cents per mile fare from one passenger, because he is weak and may be easily thrown from the train, but directed to accept the legal rate from a combination of fifty men, because the "trainmen" are not strong enough to eject them from the cars, the solution of the problem of how to make railway companies obey the law is near at hand.

Political.

—A Boston clergyman asks: "Does it pay to be good?" The Credit Mobilier fellows say they give it up.

—Miss Ella Chapin, daughter of the late Register of Deeds of Gratiot county, Michigan, has been appointed to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of her father.

—Colonel York, the man who let Pomeroy's cat out of the bag, fought in the war as a Colonel of colored troops, and since then has been in the newspaper business.

—Democratic investigating committees seldom find out where money goes to, but Democratic politicians are very keen to find out where money comes from, and can scent a bill that has profit in it the moment the clerk reads the title.

—When the New York Tribune, the World, Samuel J. Tilden and John Cochrane, backed by all the lower Tammany Democracy and Tammany Republicans, unite to indorse "reform" and condemn "Rings," we may be sure there is some extra rascality on foot.

—Hon. George W. Julian has issued a circular letter opposing earnestly the soldier's bounty bill before Congress. He treats it as a proposition to benefit speculators, claiming that the bounty of Congress in this direction has been a signal failure, a very small amount of land donated remaining in the hands of soldiers, while the transfer of warrants to speculators has retarded settlement and improvement.

—The Senate Committee made its report on the Louisiana case Thursday. The substance of it is, that the Warmoth Board had no right to canvass the returns, and that the Lynch Board had no official returns to canvass. The action of both is, therefore, rejected, and the Committee report against counting the electoral vote of the State at all. They also show that gross frauds were perpetrated under the direction of Warmoth. The report does not touch the question of the State Government.

The Wilson Committee Investigation.

WASHINGTON, February 14.

C. P. Huntington, Vice President of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, was examined before the Wilson Credit Mobilier Committee this afternoon, with reference to the construction of the road. He detailed the financial embarrassments under which the company labored in building the road. The first contracts, embracing perhaps seventy-four or seventy-five miles of the road, were let to eight or ten different parties. The witness thought to procure labor at reasonable prices and take contracts for constructing the road, he was one of the incorporators, and believed the capital stock was $5,000,000. Witness got the impression that the contract and finance committee was to receive in payment for building 600 miles of the road a part in stock of the road and part in bonds. The company was to build and equip the road. Before the Central Pacific Railroad Company had let the contract to the Finance Committee. The Central Pacific Company had already bought materials and put them on the road, and the Contract and Finance Committee paid the company for it. The Contract and Finance Committee received Government bonds and first mortgage bonds. Witness got the impression was that the Contract and Finance Committee made nothing on this contract but a certain amount of stock, and the stock was not then worth more than ten per cent. as collateral. Witness received dividends on the contract and some stock, also a few land grants, but could not remember how much at present holds perhaps $70,000 worth of stock in the road, but don't remember how many shares he held in the Finance Committee. Don't know who made the contract with the committee. The impression of the witness was that the Contract Committee now owes little or nothing, except its bonded debt. The floating debt is covered by cash or its equivalent. Don't know what proportion of the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad was owned by the Contract and Finance Committee. The stock of the Central Pacific Company would not have brought ten cents on the dollar in the market at the time of the organization of the Finance Committee. Stock was taken originally by party friends of the enterprise. The stock of the Central Pacific has no market value. Don't know how many stockholders there are in the road. It was the impression of the witness that a dozen men or firms control the majority of the stock of the road, but was not positive on that point. Could not give any idea of what the stock would bring now.

By Shellabarger: Suppose the Government should require the payment of the whole of the semi-annual interest on the Government subsidy except what you pay in the way of transportation, would you be able punctually to meet the interest?

Answer: I have no doubt that the Central Pacific Railroad Company can meet all legal obligations.

Question: Could you, on the case stated, pay interest on the government subsidy and also on the bonds as they fall due?

Answer: I have no doubt the company could.

Witness, in further examination, said the gross earnings of the road were $12,800,000, and that the running expenses were a little over forty per cent. No dividends have been paid to stockholders.

By Mr. Hoar: Is it not your belief that persons who have been prominent in the management of the road, including yourself, have received considerable value either in money, bonds or stocks as profits on contracts made for its construction.

Answer: I think we have made some money. If I have received any at all, it is as a stockholder, and in connection with the Contract and Finance Committee.

Question: Are not your profits more than seven million dollars?

Answer: Not actually, but I think the nominal or fair value of the stock of the Central Pacific Railroad Credit Mobilier would equal this sum.

Question: Is it not your belief that your firm received in the shape of bonds considerable profit on your shares?

Answer: My impression is we have received some value in bonds.

Question: Is it not more than $100,000 according to your belief?

Answer: I think very likely.

Question: Is it not over $500,000?

Answer: Not $500,000.

The witness having been interrogated as to the business of Fraucial at Washington, said it was to bring the attention of members of Congress to the views of the company on the pending question.

Question: Is Fraucial concealed in what is known as the lobby?

Witness said he was here in 1861, and recollected meeting Joseph B. Stewart as a member of considerable influence. Witness having been reminded that Stewart testified he received money from the witness, the latter said if Stewart had so testified it was true. He gave Stewart $2,000 to be used in a proper way to explain the affairs of the company. Witness had never given money or anything of value, or paid directly or indirectly to any member of Congress for the same, interesting him in any manner concerning the Central Pacific. He had no knowledge of money being paid by others for such purposes, nor did he ever have any negotiations with Fremont and Ballard to remove the opposition of the Kansas and Iowa Railroad Company to the account of 1864, for the benefit of the Pacific Railroad.

A long examination followed as to the stock and bonds, interest, &c., of the road.

Mr. Shellabarger asked what was the aggregate amount of profits divided among the members of the Construction Company for that company?

Witness replied he did not know there were any gentlemen who could answer the question. Nothing was done that was not proper to be done. The road was built at less expense than any other road, proportionally as to the length and under like circumstances. The company have done everything they agreed to do for the government, which had been better served than the company. Adjourned till to-morrow.

The Senate Investigating Committee.

In the Senate Credit Mobilier Committee to-day, Senator Patterson made a long statement, in which he said the only difference in the evidence between himself and Ames, was in relation to the investment of $20,000, which Patterson gave Ames in 1865 to invest for him, there being no difference relative to the $4,000 similarly given Ames in 1869, which were invested in Union Pacific securities. Patterson stated that he had no written memoranda relative to the first transaction, and depended upon his memory, and believing that the investment in Union Pacific stock a sound investment, led him to deny, during examination, that he had any investment in the Credit Mobilier. Patterson produced a letter from Oakes Ames, dated January 12th, 1872, in which Ames states that he had written a letter to Rollins, saying he (Ames) did not think Patterson was the owner of Credit Mobilier stock, and that even if he had there was no more impropriety than in owning bank stock. Patterson said he was much surprised when Ames produced receipts from Patterson under the dates February 14th, 1868 and May 6th, 1871. Patterson said he knew he had given Ames some receipts written by Ames, but had not the slightest idea they were of the character which they are.

Patterson continued: I can't deny from the impression I have made that my signature to those papers are in general and well aware that it is to be presumed that I had knowledge of all the facts stated in them. I can only account for my ignorance of their wording by the entire trust and confidence I reposed in Ames. I regarded him as a friend using my means so as best to promote my interests, and therefore readily signed whatever he wrote without that care and circumspection which ordinarily attends business transactions. In fact, this was a friendly rather than a business transaction, and I gave little thought to its character or details. It results from the admission made of the genuineness of my signatures, that Ames' statement as to the investment of $3,000 is sustained, and mine is erroneous.

Patterson further said that had he believed his first investment had been made in the Credit Mobilier he would have so stated, as he stated in reference to the other investment, as he had no more objection to owning stock in one than the other, and his ownership of stock in the Union Pacific had had no influence on his legislative action.

Mr. Patterson went into long explanations relative to his letter to Ames, as to the latter's evidence, and then rehearsed several circumstances of matters between him and Ames, showing that he (Patterson) was led into apparent grave mistakes by understanding from Ames' conversations, letters, etc., relative to the circumstances, that he was not an owner of any Credit Mobilier stock. He made his statement with that frankness which should characterize such communications, and if he has misjudged in believing his ownership of stock is compatible with his legislative obligations, he will bow to the determination of the committee, while holding his own opinions to the contrary.

Recess.

The Committee reassembled at half past two o'clock. Senator Harlan was recalled and in answer to a question by Mr. Stevenson said he had not found the dates of the checks received from Durant, and had never seen copies of the checks or stubs since they were given away. He had a conversation with Durant in relation to the checks, and asked him if any checks had been drawn by him or paid out of the funds of the Union Pacific Company, to aid the election of the witness in Iowa. He replied in the negative.

Senator Stevenson: I have been notified that stubs of the checks were shown to you in the Committee in the Capitol. Before proceeding to introduce that witness, I would prefer that you examine your papers, as you say you retain press copies, in order that you may refresh your memory.

Witness replied that he wanted to examine his papers, and he could probably fix the date. He had no recollection of having been shown stubs or copies of checks in the Capitol. Witness wanted to know if there were any witnesses against him; if so he had he had to hear their testimony before replying.

Senator Stevenson said he had none, but was informed by a gentleman that the fact could be proved that stubs or copies of the checks were in the capitol. He (Stevenson) did not say it was so, but had been so told, and desired to ask Harlan about it.

Mr. Stockton said he had been informed that the $10,000 was not used for election purposes, and he therefore desired to ask Harlan if he received money himself, and if so, what he did with it. He had been informed that the money was given Harlan for another purpose, and not for election purposes. He did not say it was true, and therefore asked the question.

Mr. Harlan raised the question as to the authority of the committee to go into all these subjects. It was for the committee to investigate the charge of the Credit Mobilier corruption, and not all these outside questions.

Senator Stevenson: I have seen charges published in a leading Republican paper, charging that this money was given to influence the action of Senator Harlan while Secretary of the Interior. Senator Stockton said he stated that this money was given to aid in the election of Harlan, as he could shape the election. Witness now raises the point that he will not tell the truth about the transaction, and therefore declines to answer until he finds out what we expect to prove. The question he desired to ask the witness now, was what disposition was made with that money. If Senator Harlan desires or prefers to postpone answering the question until another time, I have no objection. It is not a matter of curiosity on my part. This thing has been made public in the newspapers, and I feel it my duty as a member of the committee to ask the question.

Senator Harlan said he understood the Senator from Kentucky (Stevenson) to say that he had additional information in regard to the checks, and he thought he had a right to that information before being called upon to testify.

Mr. Morrill said the members of the committee need not give witnesses reasons for asking questions. Every Senator on the committee had a right to ask any question he desired, without giving reasons to witness.

Mr. Stockton asked the witness again if he got money for those two checks.

Answer: I got money for one; I remember distinctly; and I suppose I got that for the other also. They were both under my control, however.

Question: Who got the one?

Answer: I endorsed it and gave it to a friend to get the money. Whether he gave the money to me or I handed it to him (the friend) I don't remember.

Question: What is the name of the friend to whom you handed the check?

Answer: I didn't want to bring in the names of others.

Stockton repeated the question.

Harlan: Well I will make enquiry of the Chairman if it is necessary that I shall answer that question.

The Committee room was cleared, and after a conference of fifteen minutes among the members the doors were re-opened and Morrill, Chairman, announced that the committee was of the opinion that any question asked as to the distribution of money received was pertinent. The question was then asked, what was the name of the friend.

Answer: Carlton.

Question: Do I understand that you handed him the check?

Answer: Yes, sir.

Question: What was done with the money afterward?

Answer: It was under my control, but I am not sure whether Carlton handed the money to me or a friend.

Question: Do you recollect in what state the money was?

Answer: It was in currency.

Question: You have no recollection as to what Carlton did with it?

Answer: It was used to defray the expenses of the election in Iowa. I have no doubt it was applied as funds are usually applied in such cases.

Question: Towards your election as Senator?

Answer: Well, yes, and towards election of the Legislature also.

Carlton was agent or Secretary of the Methodist Book Concern in New York City, and resided in New Jersey. Witness did not know where he could be found now.

Question: Did you receive any other funds from any agent, employe or officer of any railroad company?

Answer; Not that I know of.

Witness then explained that he was in New York where he received a check from Durant, and asked Carlton where the bank was. He asked me if I had any bank business. I told him yes, I had a check. He replied, "Well, our bank clerk will attend to it." Witness did not remember the name of the bank. Carlton had nothing to do with the distribution of the money in Indiana.

Question: Who had charge of the distribution in Iowa?

Answer: A number of friends; I don't remember them now.

Question: Can you give us the names of some?

Answer: I will try to make out a list if the committee desires it. Wm. H. Carkhill was one of the friends with me when I got the check, and the money might have been handed to him. Was not sure who it was handed to.

Question: Did you bring that money to Washington with you, or deposit it in New York?

Answer: I am not certain whether I brought it here or gave it to a friend in New York.

Question: Name any person, either here or in New York, to whom that $5,000 was distributed?

Harlan: Well I leave it to the Chairman if I am to answer that.

The Chairman notified Harlan that he must answer.

Harlan: It will require some reflection and perhaps some search for me to ascertain the names of all parties who used funds. One I remember was B. S. Noble.

Question: Who did Noble get it from?

Answer: I don't remember whether from me or some one else.

In answer to a question of Mr. Scott, the witness testified that the money was used in paying expenses of friends in the Senatorial election. So far as it depended on the witness it was no usual.

Question, by Mr. Stevenson: Did you, after May 1st, 1865, to January 1st, 1866, receive any other money from any President, Vice-President, agent or employee of any of the three roads known as the Pacific Roads?

Answer: Not that I am aware of, so far as I can now remember.

Mr. Stevenson said he had some other questions to ask Harlan, but would postpone them until he (Harlan) should be examined as to the date of the checks.

Some portion of the money was used to defray expenses already incurred in the election. Didn't think much of it went into the hands of the Chairman of the State Executive Committee; at any rate a large portion did not.

The committee adjourned till to-morrow.

Message from the President.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I consider it my duty to call the attention of Congress to the condition of affairs in the Territory of Utah, and to the dangers likely to arise if it continues during the coming recess from a threatened conflict between the Federal and Territorial authorities. No discussion is necessary in regard to the general policy of Congress respecting the Territories of the United States, and I only wish now to refer to so much of that policy as concerns their judicial affairs and the endowment of laws within their borders. No material differences need be found in respect to these matters in the organic acts of the Territories, but an examination of them will show that it has been the invariable policy of Congress to place and keep their civil and criminal jurisdiction, with certain limited exceptions, in the hands of persons nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate, and that the general administration of justice shall be as prescribed by Congressional enactment. Sometimes the power given to the Territorial Legislature has been somewhat larger and sometimes somewhat smaller than the power generally conferred. Never, however, have powers been given to a Territorial Legislature inconsistent with the idea that the general judiciary of the Territory was to be under the direct supervision of the National Government. Accordingly the organic law creating the Territory of Utah, passed September 9, 1850, provided for the appointment of a Supreme Court, the judges of which are judges of the District Courts; clerk, a marshall and an attorney, and to these Federal officers is confided the jurisdiction in all important matters; but as decided recently by the Supreme Court, the act requires the jurors to serve in these courts to be selected in such a manner as the Territorial Legislature sees fit to prescribe.

It has undoubtedly the same right and it would be compatible with the supervisionary control of the Federal Government to leave the minor details connected with the administration of law to registration by the local authority, but such a desire ought not to govern when the effect will be, owing to the peculiar circumstances of the case, to produce a conflict between the Federal and Territorial authorities, or to impede the enforcement of the law or in any way to endanger the peace and good order of the Territory. Evidently it was never intended to entrust the Territorial Legislature with powers which would enable it by creating judicatures of its own or increasing the jurisdiction of courts appointed by Territorial authority, although recognized by Congress to take the administration of law out of the hands of Judges appointed by the President or to interfere with their action. Several years of unhappy experience make it apparent that in both these respects the Territory of Utah requires special legislation by Congress. Public opinion in that Territory, produced by circumstances too notorious to require further notice, makes it necessary, in my opinion, in order to prevent the miscarriage of justice, to maintain the supremacy of the laws of the United States and the Federal Government, to provide that the selection of grand and petit jurors for the district courts, if not put under the control of Federal officers, shall be placed in the hands of persons entirely independent of those who are determined not to enforce any act of Congress obnoxious to them, and also to pass some act which shall deprive the Probate Courts, or any court created by the Territorial Legislation of any power to interfere with or impede the action of the courts held by United States judges. I am convinced that so long as Congress leaves the selection of jurors to the local authorities, it will be futile to make any effort to enforce laws not acceptable to a majority of the people of the territory, or which interfere with local prejudice or provides for the punishment of polygamy, or any of its affiliated vices. I presume that Congress, in passing upon this subject, will provide reasonable and proper safeguards to secure honest and competent juries, whose verdicts will command confidence and be a guarantee of equal protection to all good and law-abiding citizens, and at the same time make it understood that crimes cannot be committed with impunity. I have before said that while the laws creating the several Territories have contained uniform provisions in respect to the Judiciary, yet Congress has occasionally varied these provisions, as the peculiar circumstances of the Territory affected seemed to demand, and in creating the Territory of Utah Congress evidently thought the circumstances there might require judicial remedies not necessary in other Territories, and therefore in the act creating that Territory, it is provided that a writ of error might be brought from the decision of any Judge of the Supreme or District Courts of the Territory to the Supreme Court of the United States upon any writ involving the construction or validity of personal freedom; a provision never inserted in any other Territorial act, except that creating the Territory of New Mexico. This extraordinary provision shows that Congress intended they would organize laws for the necessities of the Territory, and the legislation which I now recommend is in full harmony with the precedent thus established. I am advised that the United States Courts in Utah have been greatly embarrassed by the action of the Territorial Legislature, in conferring criminal jurisdiction and power to issue writs of habeas corpus on probate courts in the Territory, and by their consequent interference with the administration of justice, manifestly the Legislature of the Territory cannot give to any court whatever the power to discharge by habeas corpus persons held by or under process from the courts created by Congress. Complaint is made that persons held have been discharged in that way by the probate courts. I cannot doubt that Congress will agree with me that such a state of things ought no longer to be tolerated, and that no class of persons should be allowed to treat the laws of the United States with open defiance and contempt. Apprehensions are entertained that if Congress adjourns without any action on this subject, lawless violence and disorder will follow, rendering military interference necessary, and this result I should greatly deprecate. In view of this and other considerations I earnestly recommend that Congress at the present session pass some act which will enable the District Courts of Utah to proceed with independence and efficiency in the administration of law and justice.

NEW YORK.

Freight Tariffs.

NEW YORK, February 14.

At a conference of Trunk Railroad freight agents held recently in this city, it was determined that no reduction in tariffs be made. The disparity which has heretofore existed between the rates from this city and Boston, of several of the roads, has been removed. The Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, however, is not a party to the agreement.

Froude Again Criticised.

J. M. Bellew, the distinguished elocutionist, in the course of his readings last evening, took occasion to controvert some of the misstatements of the historian Froude, and questioned his veracity as a historian upon the Irish question.

The Union League Club last night appointed a committee to confer with the Governor and other officials, with a view to the speedy passage of the New York City charter.

Fire.

A fire broke out this morning in the New Haven & Harlem Railroad freight depot, damaging the new company about $30,000; Jaeger's machinery manufactory about $20,000; Thomas Jones' glass factory also $20,000, and several others in small amounts, in all reaching $100,000.

No Hope for Stokes.

Gallows Hung.

BUFFALO, February 14.

John Gaffney, the murderer of Patrick Fahey, was hanged at noon. Before the execution he said a few words begging pardon of those he had wronged. He was crazy drunk when he committed the offense, and had he been allowed to manage his own defence would have told the truth and thrown himself on the mercy of the law. He acknowledged feigning insanity. Death was almost instantaneous. The parting scene with his family was affecting. The remains were taken to Gaffney's former home.

MISSOURI.

Bogy Again.

ST. LOUIS, February 14.

The Republican this morning, referring to the minority report of Mr. Hendlo, on the subject of the Senatorial bribery case, submitted to the House yesterday, says it seems from the report that very important statements made before the committee have been withheld from the public, and adds that the report will more than ever convince the people of Missouri, that this investigation has been exceedingly superficial, and the vindication of Colonel Bogy a worse than worthless one. We once more demand in behalf of Colonel Bogy's reputation, and in behalf of the Democracy of this State, that the case be taken up again and be dealt by in a manner becoming grown up men.

The Pomeroy Business.

C. A. Rarahbacker testified yesterday before the investigation committee at Topeka, Kansas, to the effect that Pomeroy authorized him to use money to influence the votes of Representatives Davis and Cummings, but that he (Pomeroy) furnished him with no money to pay them. He also swore that he was authorized by Judge Horton to offer Representative Bacon $2,000 to vote for Pomeroy, and that he made the offer and Bacon refused it. He testified further that he was the guest of Pomeroy at the hotel during the canvass, and in answer to a question said he used to live at Waterloo, Iowa, where he was once convicted of the burglary of $2,600, and served two and one-half years in the Penitentiary, but was afterwards pardoned by the Governor, it being discovered that he was innocent of the crime. He said further that he told Judge Horton and Colonel Ednis a few days since, if they would loan him fifty dollars he would leave the city and not appear before the Committee.

City and Vicinity.

—The hand-engine, Washington, belonging to Titusville and which was sent to Union a year ago has returned, the authorities of that place having concluded to buy a steamer.

—In consequence of an informality in the proposals the Committee on Water and Water Works have extended their notice to contractors as will be seen by their advertisement in another column.

—On Monday evening Miss Fanny Price will commence a week's theatrical engagement at the Opera House supported by a good company. The play will be an old favorite with lovers of the drama entitled "Fanchon the Cricket."

—For the benefit of our firemen we clip the following item from one of our exchanges: "A plucky adherence to the maxim, 'play low,' will do more with an engine than can be done with three engines playing on the roof of a burning building. To get a fire to light rapidly, you must light it at the bottom, and to windward, and precisely the same course should be adopted in extinguishing it, if on the scene soon enough. The temptation is great to the fireman to 'play high,' and he generally yields to it; but the men who play into lower stories of a burning building, generally have the satisfaction of putting it out."

MAIN & OLES, Pleasantville, Pa., sell an Extra Young Hyson Tea for 75 cts per pound, a good Gunpowder Tea for $1,75, and a general variety of other Teas correspondingly cheap.

THE FAIR at Corinthian Hall will re-open to-night with "The Scenic Prologue," and three tableaux, written for this occasion, by Rev. Dr. Eager, after which, Miss Theresa Meising, aged ten years, will entertain the audience with singing and music. She is reported to be one of the best singers for her age in the country.

MESSRS. MAIN & OLES, grocers of Pleasantville, have lately moved into a commodious store in Holeman's new Block, which has been finely fitted up expressly for their use. The location is an excellent one, and we are glad to know that the firm have built up a large trade, by strict attention to business, and always keeping up a first-class stock.

THE MONTOUR MINSTRELS.—The Montour Tribe of Red Men, Lodge 188, will give a minstrel performance at the Parshall Opera House on the 24th inst. It promises to be a racy affair, and will undoubtedly be one of the sensations of the season. Business Manager, George H. Moon; Stage Manager, Frank H. W. Gregg; Treasurer, W. H. B. Kolty.

WE learn with great pleasure that our gentlemanly agent at Pleasantville (I. N. Coon) has succeeded in obtaining from the Pacific and Atlantic Telegraph Company the transfer of the entire proceeds of the Pleasantville office, a just tribute for his faithful discharge of all duties connected with the telegraph business during the last five years that he has been employed in the company's service at that point, as under the new arrangement all increase of business will be a direct benefit conferred, for promptness and dispatch in transmission of messages. We trust that his many friends will give him all that patronage which from his strict attention to the wants of his customers he so justly deserves.

THE COURIER HOSE MINSTRELS.—The Minstrel performance in Union Thursday was a success in everything but receipts. The house was light. The performance was the best one yet given, and showed that the boys are improving. The Company was met at the depot by the Union band, and proceeded to the hall, where supper was served. About one o'clock in the morning the special train returned, landing the Company here in safety.

The performers deserve individual mention. Almost everything was encored, McCarty's clog dancing, Goodwin's jigs and Heidell's impersonations receiving enthusiastic applause. The trip was one to be remembered.

THE Friday evening session of the Legislature was slimly attended. In the Senate a grist of bills were read, and two relating to Pittsburgh passed. In the House a large number of bills were presented, among which was one to prevent live stock running at large in Pine Grove township, Warren county; to allow Venango county to issue bonds for school purposes; to grant additional privileges to the Johnstown Savings Bank; the Senate bill to charter a new bridge company at Oil City; to divorce three couples; to legalize provisions in mortgages of married women; to grant a pension to Jacob Hirst; to authorize Titusville to issue bonds; an act relating to mechanics liens in Butler county; to provide for the redemption of certain bonds issued by Venango county.

Kephart Stand Forth.

The verdict of the Coroner's jury in the Lowrie case is evidence sufficient that deceased came to his death by an overdose of morphine administered by his physician Dr. Kephart. We have always understood that in cases of this kind, it was the duty of the Coroner, upon sufficient evidence, to hold the party to trial who was the author of death, and the public have anxiously waited to see what action was to be taken in the matter. This physician produced a diploma accorded, if we remember right, to one Thomas Kephart by the University of Pennsylvania in 1853, which is one of the highest in the State, and from which no diploma can be purchased with money. It was nineteen years ago, and Dr. Thomas P. Kephart must be a physician of nineteen years standing if he lives. The mere production of a diploma before a Coroner's Jury with the name of the individual attached, is no evidence that the diploma was accorded to the possessor, unless he also be identified as the individual to whom it was accorded. Now the question arises is this man the doctor Kephart to whom the diploma was granted or is he some one else? The public want to know this, but the practitioner has been permitted to go scott free by the coroner.

What is the evidence in the case? This man Kephart is called upon to relieve excessive pain, and according to his own sworn testimony he placed in a tumbler half "full of water, about two-thirds of a grain of morphine, and administered a teaspoonful every fifteen minutes until four doses had been given, and at the expiration of one hour half a teaspoonful, altogether about three-sixteenths of a grain. Now this is not an extraordinary dose, nor according to the evidence of the five physicians who made the post mortem examination was it sufficient to cause death, in fact some of them averred that they would not have hesitated to give a half gram at a dose under similar circumstances. These five physicians in making their report also stated that according to the best medical authorities less than one grain of morphine was never known to kill a man.

He testified that he only gave three-sixteenths of a grain. The question is did Mr. Lowrie die of less than a three-sixteenths grain dose of morphine, or did this man, his physician, perjure himself in giving his evidence.

The five physicians who made the post mortem examination were among the best in the Oil Regions, namely Drs. Varian, Barr, Dunigan, Moody and Oakes, and there was no hesitancy in pronouncing the cause of death to be an overdose of morphine. All the organs of the deceased were found in a healthy or normal condition, but the blood refused to coagulate. This peculiarity of the blood, can only be brought about by two causes, namely, an overdose of opium, or a stroke of lightning. There is no reason to suppose that the patient was struck by lightning, but there is positive evidence that morphine, which is the active principle of opium, had been administered. The stomach could not retain morphine in solution, as it would have been absorbed into the system before death, unless given in very large quantity, therefore the stomach was not analyzed. In commenting on the probabilities which led the attending physician to administer an overdose, Dr. Oakes explained that the sulphate of morphine as used in medicine was sold by the druggists in the shape of very fine crystals, which could readily be packed into one-fourth of their original volume, and also that it was physically impossible for even the most practised eye to tell the difference between one-eighth of a grain and a quarter by merely looking at it.

Another theory is that the physician knew what quantity he had given, and there is positive evidence to this effect from Dr. Dunigan, who was called in, and which is the most peculiar and damning part of the whole evidence. Dr. Dunigan stated that he was called in by Mrs. Lowrie, and found that Dr. Kephart had given his patient milk, and was about to administer the per-sulphate of iron. When asked what effect he intended to produce, this learned physician of nineteen years standing said that these substances were antidotes to morphine, and he was afraid he had given his patient an overdose of that drug. Now it is claimed by the profession that neither milk nor per-sulphate of iron, are antidotes to morphine, nor would they have the slightest effect in counteracting this poison. In justice to the dead and to the living, in justice to the medical profession, in vindication of the law of the land, as an example, and as a warning, as a penalty for presumptious or criminal ignorance, we demand that the authorities shall make further inquisition into this dark transaction, this sudden death occurring in the flush of health and life, to a citizen of Titusville. Our reporter has been diligently hunting for Dr. Kephart. Where is he? Who is he? What are his antecedents? What is his record? Is he to continue to visit the sick? and to heal diseases? Shall a mad man be trusted with fire-arms, or a child with gunpowder? Has life any sacredness in this community? There is but one answer. The public are sick of this pretense to science; this charlatanism and quackery.

The public will thank the committee of educated, skilled and conscientious physicians who have given their honest and fearless report. Has the Coroner no further duty in the premises? We shall see.

WHAT IS IT?—We must acknowledge that if Corry has the breath of life in her to-day, and she has a good deal of vitality, she owes it more to Pain of the Blade than any other man. He has but one time. It is "Corry is a Paradise to live in. Corry has unparalleled attractions for manufactures." It would not surprise us to hear him seriously advocate moving the National Capitol to Corry. We expect daily to hear that a diamond mine, or mineral spring, or other treasures have been discovered at Corry. We might quarrel with his judgment about the resources of Corry, and its charms, but we can't but admire his fanatical zeal, and if Corry ever does go up in smoke, Pain will be the last martyr to mount her funeral pyre. As for Titusville, it seems to grow and spread without any Paul of the HERALD or Apollos of the Courier (we give our contemporary the classic cognomen), to water its roots. It spreads by a law of its own interior development. The agonistic efforts of the Derrick and the Blade to attract the attention of the world are good enough in their place, and we presume are duly appreciated by their constituencies. But suspicion will be excited by such newspaper contortions about local importance and facilities. We frequently reproach ourselves for not doing justice to Titusville and its superlative advantages, but they are so patent and a matter of such common remark, that we are apt to neglect such opportunities. We have never known a man who had gone away from here, even if he had had a streak of bad luck, but that he longed disconsolately to come back. "Make me a hired servant," exclaimed a broken down millionaire to us the other day, "if be I may live and die in Titusville." What is this magnet, this cord, this spell that is peculiar to this place, and is unknown anywhere else? Is it in the air, the soil? Is it in idea or fact? Is it petroleum? Is it patent's or politics? What is it? Is it the philosopher's stone? Is it the moral atmosphere of the place? Is it the confluence of all the people, or the striking individuality of each? It matters not what the times are, our people will not be drawn away, and people will keep coming. We have had many investigations into the secret influence that Titusville exerts on all who come here, but none could agree what that something was.

A MAN MISSING FROM PARKER'S LANDING.

Did He Perish in the Scrubgrass Accident?

PARKER'S LANDING, February 12.

On last Friday evening Mr. James Graham, of Milford, near this place came to "The Landing" with some friends and after transacting some business started to return home. He stopped in an engine house within less than forty rods of his house and remained in company with some friends a short time. Soon Mr. Graham disappeared. His brother-in-law, who was one of the persons with him, supposed he had gone to his house. Some time after it was ascertained that Mr. Graham had not gone home, and as he failed to appear in the morning, search was made for him. It has been ascertained that he came back to the Landing. He was in the ten-pin alley with a Mr Smith, a friend of his, and took a cigar at Mr. Smith's request; also gave Smith one out of his pocket. Smith saw him leave the alley but did not see him afterwards, nor can any trace of him be discovered, though search has been made in every direction.

It is known that he had a considerable sum of money on his person at the time of his disappearance, which, coupled with the fact that his family relations have always been of an agreeable nature, also that his outstanding bills (he has been running a coal bank and supplying wells) will more than cover his present indebtedness, leads to a strong suspicion that he has been foully dealt with. His companions say he had been drinking some, but not enough to notice, and his conduct heretofore has been blameless. Should this meet the eye of any person knowing of his whereabouts, they will confer a very great favor on his almost distracted family by at once communicating the same to them or to George W. Orr, Justice of the Peace, Foxburg, Pa. Said James Graham is about six feet high, slim, has light whiskers and mustache, had on a dark brown or grey suit, pretty well worn, and black felt hat.

WAKEFUL.

REMARKS.—The above was left for publication by Mr. John M. Decker, of Parker's Landing, who is in quest of the missing man. The Scrubgrass railroad accident occurring on Friday evening, some apprehension is felt that Mr. G. was a passenger on the fatal train. If so, those who escaped destruction may have noticed him, and can communicate the information to Mr. Orr. Mr. Graham was a coal dealer and had a wife and one child, whose anxiety may be imagined at his mysterious disappearance. The report that only three persons were killed is erroneous. Bystanders can testify that four dead bodies were recovered. There seems to be a discrepancy as to the number of killed and missing between the statement of the conductor and that of some of the passengers. The conductor puts the number at eighteen; one of the passengers said he counted twenty-seven in the car. This would leave five more bodies to be recovered or accounted for. The river should be dragged at once for some further trace. Doubtless those who have lost friends mysteriously will turn their inquiries in this direction.—[ED.

Local Option Law.

[Communicated.]

The time is now close at hand when the citizens of Titusville will be called upon to decide by their votes whether this city is to have license granted to its respectable hotels and restaurants, or whether the Local Option Law, with its total abstinence, shall be introduced for a change. Before inflicting such a penance on a large portion of this community, it will be well to reflect and perhaps see what effect such a law would have in the interest of the city and its inhabitants. The fact that hotels and restaurants are a blessing in our midst no one will deny. They are necessary for the traveling public, and for our home inhabitants. The thousands of people who come here from our neighboring towns and cities, the farmer who comes in on a cold, stormy winter day, perhaps half frozen to death, all find these houses open to welcome them and provide them with every comfort they may need. And here we may say it is well that every class of people can find their accommodations at the different class and grades of houses suitable to their rank, customs and habits of life. For instance, if a man can not afford to pay three dollars per day to stop at the Parshall House, he may stop at the Farmer's Hotel, at one dollar and fifty cents per day; or if he has not seventy-five cents to pay for a dinner, he can get one for less money. Now it seems so strange when no one dictates to us what we shall eat as long as we pay for it, that one class of people would set themselves up to be the guardians of another class, and say to them what they shall drink when there is no earthly doubt that one is as able to manage its own affair as the other is to manage it for them. While beer, wines and liquors are known and acknowledged to be good in their place, and very necessary in many instances, I would ask who is the proper person to decide for me neither I should drink or not as long I pay for it. If I do myself an injury by drinking, I would be very foolish and if I was to play with a torpedo, which I ought to know might blow me into eternity, together with innocent neighbors around me, as it has happened of late, I suppose that would be foolish too; but it is not drinking that causes our worst accidents nor our most horrible crimes. It was not a drunkard that assassinated our late President Lincoln; it was not a drunkard that shot James Fisk in New York; Ruloff was not a drunkard, yet he was one of the blackest criminals on record. And does any one suppose that drinking would be restricted if this Local Option Law was passed? No, it would be as impossible to stop men from drinking as it would to stop them from eating. Those that wish to drink would laugh at any such attempt, but what effect would it have? The most probable result would be that instead of people drinking as they now do a glass of beer or wine, instead of stopping at a lager beer saloon on a hot summer day, and refreshing one's self with a good, cool and fresh glass of lager, which seems as natural for a German to want as his bread and butter, (and no small portion of other nationalities are that way inclined,) instead of that refreshing and harmless beverage, the demijohn and the whisky barrel would be most popular. The hotels would have their dark corners, to which every other traveler and guest would be shown, and who like a thief that was going to steal something, would drink far more than he would otherwise have done; or the flask would be every one's companion that wanted to drink, and it would take more police than we have at hand now to watch the club-rooms that are and would be established if this law should be adopted. It would be a cunning trick for the simple-minded, or those that are easily tempted to get led away from bad habits to worse, and surely if officers can not be found to enforce the law that now governs men from getting drunk, it is fair to presume that they could not be found then.

And now I would like to ask every liberal-minded man that has a vote to cast at this election if any interest could be gained for the general business of Titusville if beer, wines and liquors were taken from our respectable hotels and restaurants; if there is any that are not respectable it is easy to close them up and get them away, but if a clean sweep was made it seems more likely to me that one half of our hotels and three-fourths of the restaurants would close up and move away, and hundreds of people that come here now and spend their money with us would not come here then, or if they did they would not stay long. Every property owner would soon find this to be one of those old fogey towns that never was known to progress. We might therefore say that no good would be done, but a great deal of harm. What consolation could be to any one here to see our brewery, which has grown up with the City of Titusville, during the last twelve years, and which has given support to hundreds of people in various ways, and has made business for others very materially increase many thousand dollars, wiped out. It would be a dead loss to us if our business had to be closed. The same can be said of a great number of hotels or restaurants, that are fitted up at a large expense, and would have to be closed up, for it would not pay to run them on the temperance plan.

Those people could sell out at auction and move away, with a great sacrifice, throwing a great many persons out of employment, and this city could indeed get rid of some liberal, and I may say, some very enterprising men. I am one that is as much opposed to intemperance as any man here, and would do as much as any one to keep good order and have the law enforced, which in my opinion is good enough as it is, and I very much doubt this Local Option Law to be constitutional. But if it is, it would certainly be in contact with the liberty of which we boast, and no one can see any justice in rendering thousands of dollars of investments a total loss, and throwing any amount of people out of employ that are now making an honest living, but would perhaps be ruined if they were compelled to quit the business which they carry on in good faith, and on which they have built their future calculations.

JOSEPH HOENIG.

To permit the voters of this Commonwealth to vote every three years on the question of granting licenses to sell intoxicating liquors.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted, &c., That on the third Friday in March, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, in every city and county in this Commonwealth, and at the annual municipal elections every third year thereafter, in every such city and county, it shall be the duty of the Inspectors and Judges of Elections in the cities and counties, to receive tickets, either written or printed, from legal voters of said cities and counties, labeled on the outside "license," and on the inside "for license," or "against license," and to deposit said tickets in a box provided for that purpose by said inspectors and judges, as is required by law in the case of other tickets received at said election; and the tickets so received shall be counted, and a return of the same made to the Clerk of the Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace of the proper county, duly certified as required by law; which certificate shall be laid before the Judges of the said Court at the first meeting of said Court after said election shall be held and shall be filed with the other records of the court; and it shall be the duty of Mayors of cities, and Sheriffs of counties, or of any other officer whose duty it may be to perform such service, to give due public notice of such special election above provided for, three weeks previous to the time of holding the same, and also three weeks before such election every third year thereafter: Provided, That this act shall not be construed to repeal or affect any special law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors or prohibiting the granting of licenses: Provided, That when the municipal and township elections in any county or city do not occur on the third Friday in March, the elections provided for in this section shall be held on the day fixed for the municipal elections in said county; and provided further, That all licenses granted after the first day of January, 1873, shall cease, determine, and become void on the first day of April, 1873, if the electors for which they shall be granted determines against the granting of license; and the Treasurer of the proper county shall then refund, to the holder of such license, the money so paid therefor, for which the said Treasurer shall be entitled to credit in his accounts with the Commonwealth.

SECTION 2. That in receiving and counting, and in making returns of the votes cast, the inspectors and judges, and clerks of said election, shall be governed by the laws of this Commonwealth regulating general elections; and all the penalties of said election laws are hereby extended to, and shall apply to the voters, inspectors, judges and clerks, voting at and in attendance upon the elections held under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. Whenever by the returns of elections in any city or county aforesaid, it shall appear that there is a majority against license, it shall not be lawful for any court or board of license commissioners to issue any license for the sale of spirituous, vinous, malt, or other intoxicating liquors, or any admixture thereof, in said city or county, at any time thereafter, until at an election above provided, a majority shall vote in favor of license; Provided, That nothing contained in the provisions of this act shall prevent the issuing of licenses to druggists, for the sale of liquors for medicinal purposes: Provided, the citizens of the county of Lebanon shall vote upon the question the third Friday of March, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, on the same day and time when the townships of the county of Lebanon hold their spring elections.

Approved March 27, 1872.

Special Notice.

On and after date, all oil not removed from the Company's tanks within thirty (30) days after delivery to them, will be subject to a deduction of five (5) cents per barrel per month or fractional part thereof, from date of receipt by the company until removal, for evaporation and waste. Receipts will be issued for oil delivered to the company. Orders on the company will not be recognized after this day.

WM. WARMCASTLE,
may1tf Superintendent

IMPORTANT NOTICE.

Mutual Pipe Co., Union Pipe Co., Butler Pipe Co.

MANAGER'S OFFICE, FOXBURG, Pa., January 15, 1873.

Notice is hereby given that on and after February 1, 1873, the above companies will enforce their demurrage charge of one cent per barrel per day in all cases where owners fail to move their oil from the companies' tanks with promptness.

Oil run from wells will be free from the above charge for ten days from date when run. Certificates issued will bear the date when the oil was run. In both cases the charge will begin upon the eleventh day from date of run or certificate issued.

After the certificate is turned in to the company by whom issued the charge will terminate, so long as buyers use all possible diligence in moving or shipping the oil.

Oil in the tanks of the companies February 1st next or certificates out on that date will be treated as run or issued on February 1st, and will be free from the above charge for ten days thereafter.

The above companies receive oil for transportation only. It is therefore necessary that Producers sell or move their oil as soon as possible after it is run, and that Shippers use every effort to ship their oil when purchased, thereby enabling the companies to render the Producers the promptest service in moving oil from their wells.

The Morning Herald.

Which is Best?

BY CASSIE.

This world is dark and dreary,
When we make it so;
This world is bright and cheerful,
When we take it so.

Our friends are cold and distant
When e'er we doubt them;
Our friends are true and loving
When e'er we trust them.

Is it best to live in the dark,
Doubting day by day,
Or live in the light of Love
Trusting day by day?

Religious.

God values men according to what they have come through.

When the heart is cleft to its core there is no speech or language.

The earth does not bring forth until the blow rends it.

Our homes should be as holy as our churches, to say the least.

Persecution often does in this life what the last day will do completely—separate the wheat from the tares.

There are no songs comparable to the songs of Zion; no oratorio equal to those of the prophets, and no politics like those which the Scriptures teach.—Milton.

Remember how many have stood before God and man as surely as thou dost, and yet have fallen and have been overthrown horribly.—John Bradford.

If you come to the Holy Scripture with growth in grace, and with aspirations for yet higher attainments, the book grows with you, grows upon you.—Spurgeon.

Prayer is the highest form of love and trust exercised in the ripest, chiefest and best part of a man's nature, toward the best and sweetest, and most loving of beings.

If we thoroughly examine, we shall find that pride, policy and power are three principal ingredients in all the disturbance of a church.

Begin every day with prayer. It is the golden key that unlocks heaven to pour down blessings on you. End every day with prayer. It is the same golden key that locks you up under heaven's protection.

Repentance hath a purifying power, and every fear is of a cleansing nature; but those penitential clouds must still be kept dropping; one shower will not suffice; for repentance is not one single action, but a course.—South.

Profane swearing is abominable. Vulgar language is disgusting. Loud laughter is impolite. Inquisitiveness is offensive. Tattling is mean. Telling a falsehood is contemptible. Ignorance is disgraceful and laziness is shameful.

Many of the members of our churches are honorary members. They don't go to prayer meetings; they don't attend the Sabbath school; they don't add to the life of the church; they are passengers on the Gospel ship; they bear no burdens, add no strength; their names are on our books; they are honorary members.

Oh, the little things which pat some workers out of temper and out of heart! Oh, the looks or not looks, the words or the silence, that will some spirits give up any grace. "Forgiving one another" seems to have gone out of fashion with many people. "Forgiving one another, even as God for Christ sake hath forgiven you," is forgotten.

The late venerable Dr. Alexander, of Princeton, when criticising a sermon of one of his students, remarked that it had no hooks in it by which to catch the sinner's verb which is used by them in reference to unprofitable conversation, that the sound of the millstone is heard, but no meal is seen. So it is with many sermons.

I do not admire in a man the extreme of one virtue, as of valor, if I do not see at the same time the extreme of the opposite virtue, as in Epaminodas, who had the extreme of valor and the extreme of gentleness. For otherwise this character would not rise, but fall, by the excess of the one side. A man shows true greatness, not by touching one extreme, but by touching both at once, and filling up the interval.—Pascal.

I seldom come to the conclusion of a week but my mind is struck with the rapidity with which it has flown. Quickly has it been told up, but it can never be told again. I am hastening toward eternity as fast as time can carry me. Oh! how foolish to be engrossed by the world when I have a precious soul so worthy of my deep regard! If the thought of dying were oftener before us sinful things would lose their deceitful influence.—Rowland Hill.

There is hardly any one thing bearing upon the peace, growth and usefulness of our churches which should so claim our earnest and prayerful consideration as that of minorities. It is the source of untold troubles, depression and losses to our churches every year. We all know that a few members of a church, or even a single person, unscrupulous in the employment of means to gain an end, by constant agitation can disturb the peace and retard the progress of any church.

Truth and Christian patience is not vainglorious; it is not void of faith; is associated with humility; is powdered and salted with obedience to all God's Commandments; is garnished with hope of the life to come; with modesty, with soberness, with gravity; with wisdom, with love, not only of our friends and lovers, but also of our slanderers, of our backbiters, of our mockers and scorners, of our oppressors and robbers, and most cruel enemies.—Roger Hutchinson.

When the first gray hairs become visible when the unwelcome truth fastens itself upon the mind that a man is no longer going up hill, but down, and that the sun is always westering, he looks back on things behind. When we were children we thought as children. But now there lies before us manhood with its earnest work, and thou old age, and then the grave and then home. There is a second youth for man, better and holier than his first, if he will look on and not back.—F. W. Robertson.

He who thinks he is humble is probably the proudest man in the place. But there are some men in whom self-consciousness is so uppermost, and so evidently powerful, that you can see it in almost everything they do. It is their struggle, if they are Christians, to keep it down; but it will come up in the form of being very easily annoyed because they are overlooked in some good work, or in being easily irritated because they fancy that somebody is opposing them, when probably that somebody never thought of them.—Spurgeon.

It is the solemn thought connected with middle life that life's last business is begun in earnest; and, it is then, midway between the cradle and the grave, that a man begins to marvel that he let the days of youth go by so half enjoyed. It is the pensive autumn of feeling, it is the sensation of half sadness that we experience when the longest day of the year has passed, and every day that follows is shorter, and the light fainter, and the feebler shadows tell that nature is hastening with gigantic footsteps to her winter grave.—F. W. Robertson.
